I've been slightly obsessed with finding the perfect pair of white maternity jeans this spring and have devoted some serious time (and a bit of money) to finding the best pair out there. I wanted a pair with a slim leg, but not too skinny, and a pair with a well-fitting waistband in which a very pregnant woman could feel comfortable.

The clear winner is the white AG 5-pocket Slim Leg Maternity Jean, available here at Pea in the Pod for USD $245. I know, I know—the price is high. But I tried out several pairs of more reasonably priced white maternity jeans, including pairs from Earl and from Citizens of Humanity, and these were the most stylish I could find, as well as the most comfortable (those two qualities do not usually come together, especially with maternity clothing). Besides the chic, slim leg fit, these jeans also have Pea in the Pod's trademark Secret Fit Belly waistband, which I've blogged about here before and will be a lifesaver for you late in the third trimester when it seems virtually impossible to keep your pants up.

If you feel guilty about making such a pricey investment, remind yourself that it is Memorial Day weekend, the official start of summer, and there is no better summer basic than a pair of white jeans (my mother always insisted one simply could not wear white clothing until after Memorial Day). These jeans look good with everything, from the most basic tank top and sandals for daywear to a chic summer blouse and platform heels for evening. If you are about to give birth, plan on relying on these as a staple of your postpartum wardrobe as well. They are trendy enough that it won't look like you are still wearing maternity clothing (I speak from personal experience). AG jeans fit true to size but as I find is the case with all designer maternity jeans, it doesn't hurt to order one size up.

And make sure to check the blog this weekend—I am working on a summary of all the Memorial Day online sales. A few good maternity sales, and some really great sales on children's clothing...
