Nearly all of the 35 U.S.C. § 314(a) factors favor discretionary denial. Recognizing this, Petitioner offers irrelevant and novel arguments.

I. Petitioner’s Rule 325(d) Arguments Are Irrelevant.

Patent Owner’s request for discretionary denial is based entirely on 35 U.S.C. § 314(a). Despite this, Petitioner spends the first third of its opposition brief addressing an exception to 35 U.S.C. § 325(d). Opp. at 1-8. Under that statute, the Board may discretionarily deny a petition based on the same or substantially similar prior art already considered by the examiner during prosecution of the patent. The Board has recognized an exception when the examiner materially erred when considering the allegedly cumulative art. Advanced Bionics, LLC v. MED-EL Elektromedizinische Geräte GmbH, IPR2019-01469, Paper 6 at 7 (PTAB Feb. 13, 2020). Thus, only after determining that prior art previously considered by the Office is substantially similar to the art relied upon by the Petitioner, does the Board proceed to step two of the analysis and consider whether the examiner committed material error. Id. Because Patent Owner does not argue that § 325(d) applies, Petitioner’s arguments based on the exception to that law are misplaced. Indeed, all of the cases on which Petitioner relies (Opp. at 1, 7) involved Patent Owner requests for discretionary denial under § 325(d).

The problems with Petitioner’s argument do not end there. Petitioner identifies two alleged errors by the examiner, and neither cuts against discretionary denial. Petitioner first contends the examiner erred by failing to realize the art relied upon in the petition even existed. This misses the entire point of § 325(d), which is whether the examiner misunderstood cumulative art. Petitioner next argues that the examiner materially erred in considering three references (Breed, Kanevsky, and Cai) without ever suggesting that error has anything to do with the references cited in the Petition. In fact, these references were not even included as exhibits to the Petition, and were improperly introduced and substantively discussed in Petitioner’s Opposition. See 35 U.S.C. § 312(a)(3); Intelligent Bio-Sys., Inc. v. Illumina Cambridge Ltd., 821 F.3d 1359, 1369 (Fed. Cir. 2016). For these additional reasons, Petitioner’s “material error” arguments should be disregarded.

II. Petitioner Wrongly Argues that Complexity of the Parallel Proceeding Outweighs Other Factors.

Petitioner contends that “the complexity of the parallel litigation may outweigh other factors.” Opp. at 19. The Director has never identified this as a § 314(a) factor; instead, Petitioner relies on a single distinguishable case that states “[t]he large number and vast scope of the patents asserted in the district court litigation ... weighs against discretionary denial.” Tesla v. United States of Am. as represented by the Secretary of the Navy, IPR2025-00341, Paper 12, 2 (PTAB June 13, 2025). In Tesla, the petitioner filed IPR challenges for all the asserted patents and those patents “spann[ed] nine different families” and “involve[d] a diverse range of subject matter.” Id. The decision concluded the “Board [rather than the court] is better suited to review a large number of patents involving diverse subject matter.” Id. at 2-3. Here, Petitioner filed petitions against only three of the eleven asserted patents in the litigation and relies upon the same prior art for several unchallenged patents, such that a trial will invariably involve analysis of Petitioner’s prior art even if the challenges here are instituted. Paper 6 at 12-13; Opp. at 18 (admitting same). Thus, the complexity of the case would not be simplified by institution, and this alleged consideration does not weigh against discretionary denial—much less “outweigh” all other factors as argued by Petitioner. See Opp. at 19.

III. Petitioner’s Speculation that Trial Will Be Delayed Is Unsupported.

Petitioner’s suggestion that trial in the parallel proceeding will be delayed is pure speculation belied by the data. Judge Gilstrap’s scheduling of numerous trials for the same day is not a new practice. And the objective data provided by Patent Owner’s for Judge Gilstrap—which encompasses all patent cases on his congested docket over the last five years—confirms the scheduled trial date will not meaningfully move. Ex. 2009. Petitioner’s district-wide data does not refute this.

Accordingly, Patent Owner requests discretionary denial of the Petition.
