more time free from cancer,” said Helmy Eltoukhy, chairman, Co-CEO, and Co-Founder of Guardant Health. “We are grateful for this recognition among other leading companies as it is a strong reflection of our entire team’s commitment to transforming patient care through critical insights into disease drivers, advanced blood and tissue tests, real-world data, and AI analytics.”

Guardant recently reached several significant milestones, including announcing that it has achieved 500 peer-reviewed publications and 500,000 patient tests delivered. Earlier this month, the company completed the Molecular and Clinical Genetics Panel of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA)’s Medical Devices Advisory Committee, which strongly recommended FDA approval of the company’s Shield™ blood test for colorectal cancer screening in adults age 45 and older who are at an average risk for the disease. This included a panel voting that Shield’s benefits as a primary non-invasive screening option outweigh any potential risks. A decision about Shield’s approval is expected by the FDA later this year.
